Is it a product or a security?

- ❖ To take a closer look at the complexities and classifications of cryptocurrencies (commodity or security), we must first have a clear understanding of their respective characteristics. Basic definitions of these terms lay the foundation for better understanding.
- ❖ The types of goods that can be exchanged are indicated as goods. These products are commonly found in the form of raw materials or agricultural products. They often play an important role in manufacturing other goods or facilitating services. Familiar examples include elements such as oil, gold, wheat, and coffee. These instruments are typically traded in futures markets. In a futures market, contracts are entered into to buy or sell a product at a fixed price on a set date.
- ❖ Conversely, the term security refers to a tradable instrument that has monetary value. It represents a claim on the issuer's assets or future earnings. Securities typically include options, stocks, bonds, and derivatives. Exchanges of securities customarily take place on public exchanges or over-the-counter markets where buyers and sellers negotiate prices and quantities. Securities are often jurisdiction-specific, subject to extensive laws and regulations.
